People are yearning to tune in to their unique reason for being, desperately seeking ways to matter. Purpose is available to anyone, anywhere in the world, and when we discover and serve from it, we encounter unparalleled fulfillment and can make the difference worthy of our one, precious life. In this fireside conversation, a few of the women who authored their story in a soon-to-be-released anthology weigh in on why the world needs purpose and what can happen when we live from it. Ours is a collection of stories, from Australia to Zambia, featuring women of all ages, socioeconomic background

Cristal de Oliveira

My name is Cristal de Oliveira. I'm a 30-year old Brazilian passionate about people and the creativeness we can achieve with the right resources. My role in this world is to provide ways that give people access to opportunities democratically and inclusively. I want to do this by helping people in vulnerable situations, facilitating a sustainable future. I like to deal with the types of challenges that are too complex to describe but that, when resolved, have a significant impact. My work resonates with this through the development and implementation of projects from a people-centered perspective. I have a postgraduate degree in Social Innovation Management from Amani Institute. I'm a Millen
