May 4th 2006: Charlie Walton: When There Are No Words

Charlie Walton started out to be a school teacher but only spent two years in the classroom before getting sidetracked into an exciting 35-year career as a free-lance writer, providing training materials in video and print for major corporations, colleges and universities. Charlie has written many books, six of which are under his own name. Two of his books, "When There Are No Words" and "Packing for the Big Trip" resulted from the sudden accidental death in 1986 of two of the Walton's three sons and have been widely used to help persons who are struggling through the grief of
