November 26th 2009: Special Encore
Presentation: Domestic Violence and Desperate
Acts: Interview with Lorena Bobbitt

Back in June, 1993, 16 years ago, headlines all over the world were focused on pretty much one thing: the seemingly unbelievable story of a woman who had cut off her husband's penis and thrown it out of the window of her car into a field beside the highway, only to have it found by the police and reattached by doctors. Most people were absolutely stunned by this unbelievable story. This week, Crime Prevention Specialist Susan Bartelstone talks with Lorena Bobbitt, the perpetrator of this act, about what led a shy, frail-looking woman to do what she did. She talks frankly about what happened
