February 2nd 2012: Special Encore
Presentation: Dallas Cowboy's Football Star Tackles Online Trading!

Smart football players know it's not enough to leave it all out on the field. With an average NFL career that lasts just three years, some pro-ballers make attempts to hold on to their wealth once their glory days have passed. No one exemplifies this pro-planning philosophy like Dallas Cowboys Long Snapper Louis-Philippe Ladouceur, who spends the off-season training his money. Through prudent planning, Ladouceur's financial portfolio should perform at championship levels long after his body no longer can. On this episode of The Good Life, this articulate, savvy financial whiz tells us how to b

Louis-Philippe Ladouceur

L.P. Ladouceur is not the stereotypical football player. Born in Montreal, Quebec, Canada, his first language is French - where his family still resides. Since he came onto the Dallas Cowboys in 2005 he has had nearly a perfect record as a Long Snapper, yet he is the least mentioned player on the team.
