May 11th 2017: Embrace the Ebb and Flow of Relationships

Many people believe that relationships between two people should be 50/50. Ideally, this is true – burdens and rewards should be equally shared. However, that is not reality. On any given day, one person gives more and carries more of the burden, even if the rewards are shared equally. Relationships have an ebb and flow. Some days are 70/30 and others are 40/60. And it's important to note that this may not even out over time. Is that fair and equitable? Larry Sternberg and Kim Turnage have the answers!
