Good Grief with Cheryl Jones
Wednesday at 2 PM Pacific
December 27th 2017: Who Will Take Care of Me

As conversations about the end of life have become more open and available, many of us have become more active in planning our own ends. But what are the resources that help us to plan well? What can support us as we work to understand our choices and their consequences? Thankfully, there is help available. Joy Loverde has written a book to help us answer the questions most critical in planning for an end of life that reflects our values and resources. Who Will Take of Me When I'm Old? frames the questions to ask and the possible answers, leaving us free of the worry of an unplanned last period.
