Good Grief with Cheryl Jones
Wednesday at 2 PM Pacific
January 24th 2018: The Unspeakable Loss

When therapist Nisha Zenoff's 17 year old son died, her extensive training in supporting clients in grief suddenly felt inadequate. She entered a new world that called everything into question. Putting one foot in front of another, time passed and she came through the worst initial grief and became especially well prepared to support other parents who had lost a child. Although grief does not end, Nisha found a way forward. She has now compiled everything she has learned, from her own experience and from other parents she has worked with and interviewed, into a book. The Unspeakable Loss explores
