January 16th 2019: Worth It

How can we possibly make sense from the death of a child. For most of us, especially parents, the thought is beyond comprehending, until that child is ours. But recognizing that children do, in fact, die and creating the best possible circumstances for the child and their family is such a departure from the medicalized deaths many families experience. Kathy Hull knows this first hand, because the respite and palliative care house she founded has seen many meaningful lives that have ended in her care. Name after her own two siblings who died at 16 and 30, George Mark house offers, without charge
