The Work/Life Balance Friday at 2 PM Pacific

May 8th 2020: The Inevitable Collapse of Agile - David Stackleather

The term "Agile" is so overloaded today that if an organization says they are Agile it provides precious little information about the them. Agile, in its current general understanding, has become a management fad. Like other fads before it, TQM, Reengineering, Six Sigma, it will go out of favor as more and more companies try to "install the Agile" and find that their problems do not magically disappear. This doesn't mean however that businesses leaders should abandon the philosophical framework that was the original understanding of Agile. On the contrary, in times of great change such as the

Featured Guest

David Stackleather

David Stackleather is an independent management consultant focused on unraveling troubled large scale projects and helping organizations transformation into high performing and adaptable companies. In short, his mission is to help teams and organizations become better. Better in the sense of increased teamwork, increased flow, increased learning, and increased passion about their mission. Most companies today are run based on flawed and outdated assumptions about how people work their best. These assumptions around the structure, work methods, and management got us far during the industrial revolution, but those same approaches no longer work. The good news is that we know what does work. Th
