October 5th 2020: Common Sense Lessons for Parents and Children Getting Through COVID

Children learn their knowledge and social skills in school. How can children learn them when they can't fully engage in school? Ensuring that students continue to develop critical social, and emotional skills in a socially distanced world will require parents and educators to develop new strategies and approaches to navigate during the pandemic. Nancy and Kevin both have extensive experience working with children and will share their insights to guide parents to help their children.
