July 3rd 2021: 4th Amendment Does Not Give LE the Right to Access Encrypted Data

The recent take-down of 300 criminal syndicates in more than 100 countries by the DoJ, selling their own 12,000 encrypted devices and services to which they had the decryption keys, has resurrected the question of encryption and lawmakers' claims that backdoors into encryption are necessary. Lawmakers, and even some data security personalities, point to this event saying it proves encryption should have backdoors. There are also claims that the fourth amendment supports this view. But wait! Doesn't it prove otherwise? And, doesn't the long history of failures for creating encryption backdo
