Congrats to all graduating seniors who successfully applied to college and are preparing to start this fall. Laura Amigone, a college success coach from Rudder Coaching, joins the podcast this week to offer advice to these students to help them make a smooth transition from high school to college. We'll also discuss why saving is important for everyone in another of our Personal Finance 101 series.

Sally Ganga

Sally Gang's most recent college admissions role was at the University of Chicago, where she was associate director of admissions and ran the application reading and scholarship process. Previously she had worked at Whittier College in the Los Angeles area as an associate director of admissions. She graduated from Reed College in Portland, Oregon with a B.A. in history, beginning her admissions career there first as a tour guide and then as an intern in the admission office before being hired after graduation as an assistant dean of admission. After leaving college admissions, Sally became the director of college counseling at both the Archer School for Girls and Chadwick School in the Los

Laura Amigone

Laura Amigone is the founder of Rudder Coaching, offering 1-on-1 coaching for college students who want to make the most of their college experience and reach their full college potential. After 5 years in college admissions at Fordham University and Columbia University, Laura moved to the other side of the desk as a high school guidance and college counselor for 10 years at Xavier High School in Manhattan. During this time, she saw the need for more focus on the skills needed to be successful throughout the ups and downs of college, not just getting into college. Laura brings a unique combination of professional experience, and her own personal experience as a former college procrastinator
