Technology Revolution: The Future of Now
Wednesday at 8 AM Pacific/11 AM Eastern
July 21st 2021: The Future of Women in STEM:
What About Their Creativity?

The Buzz 1: "After a certain high level of technical skill is achieved, science and art tend to coalesce in esthetics, plasticity, and form. The greatest scientists are always artists as well." (Albert Einstein, 1923; news.microsoft.com/europe/2017/12/05/creativity-stem-contradiction-terms-not-europes-girls/) The Buzz 2: "Unfortunately, creativity is often attributed more to men than women...In Europe, women make up fewer than 40 per cent of all scientific researchers – despite the fact the continent has a centuries-old legacy of creative female scientists and inventors." The Buzz 3: "How

Cali Bird

Cali Bird published her debut novel, a romantic comedy called Tales of the Countess, in 2020. Originally a music major, upon leaving university she ended up training to be an accountant. That led to a spell in investment banking before making a sideways jump to be a technology consultant. At the start of her career Cali ignored her creative side, which didn't work out so well on the mental health front. Since 2001 she has managed to combine both business and creative pursuits. During the Spring and Summer of 2021, she is taking a sabbatical from her day job to write her next novel.

Alison Morgan

Alison Morgan is a member of the Crime Writers Association. She only took up writing crime novels 5 years ago when a heart condition ended her beloved nursing career prematurely. Writing, she says, saved her sanity. Having spent thirty years in the National Health Service in the UK, gathering qualifications along the way, she specialised in psychiatry. As a registered Mental Health Nurse working in the community and specifically in First Episode Psychosis, she eventually became Clinical Nurse Manager for an innovative countywide service. Retired from nursing, now she educates others about mental health issues through entertaining stories, public speaking and audio narration. Writing under th
