March 25th 2009: The Lean M&A for Lean Times

When facing a tough global economic downturn, companies may merge for greater competitive and synergistic strength. In good times, when growth is the prime reason for an M&A, budgets for the integration can be generous, but what happens in lean times, when money is hard to come by, and every penny must be justified to corporate stakeholders and bean counters? How does IT get the money it needs to do the integration right?
