October 06th 2009: Using Mining Stocks to Survive Economic Pathology

Decades of Keynesian economic policy and irresponsible money creation by the FED has resulted in America becoming the biggest debtor nation in history. Because of that, America is facing prospects for the greatest economic decline since the 1930s. The only question now is whether the symptoms of this decline will be inflation or deflation. Our Special Guest this week, Sean Brodrick believes we face more deflationary pressures in the financial markets in the near term. However, longer term he thinks inflation could be an extreme problem. Thinking back on Ian Gordon's comments last week, we
