April 6th 2010: Professionals with significant disabilities: balancing health, caregiving and career

Dan Thompson and Dr. J R Harding are successful professionals. Both have significant disabilities. For them, balancing health, caregiving and career is their continuing challenge. They describe how they overcome it, day by day, hour by hour. They explain what a significant disability is and what it means to them personally. They talk about their professional lives, how they work, and how their work helps others with significant disabilities. What got them started in their careers? What things gave them the greatest challenges? What things now give them the most job satisfaction, and why these
