September 17th 2010: "California's Oil Spill...how Texas Oil Money is gushing into the Golden State's Ballot Box"

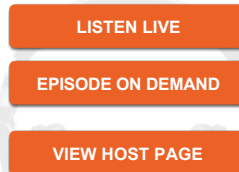

You can call California a bellwether state for environmental policies, or you can be accurate... and call it the rock star state for bold environmental movements. In 2006, Republican Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger signed AB32 into law, which aimed to curb greenhouse gas emissions and move toward a clean energy economy. It gained worldwide attention as one of the first large economic forces in the world putting "green" on the front burner. But as he prepares to term out of office, an initiative backed by big oil companies from outside the state will appear on the November ballot. Today, we are jo

Steve Maviglio

Steve Maviglio is the spokesperson for the No on 23 campaign. Steve has nearly 30 years of campaign experience and government service. He was the Deputy Chief of Staff for two of California's history-making Assembly Speakers, Fabian Nunez and Karen Bass, where he worked on the legislation that Prop 23 is trying to repeal, Assembly Bill 32. Previously, Steve was press secretary to Governor Gray Davis. Before moving to California, he worked on Capitol Hill and in the Clinton Administration. Prior to moving to Washington, he ran a variety of campaigns in New Hampshire and served in the Granite State's legislature for six years himself.
