February 4th 2011: Why do we cheat? Is Monogamy unnatural? Prehistory Might Tell Us The Answers!

Probably one of the most fascinating shows to date today. We're interviewing the author of the controversial book SEX AT DAWN: The Prehistoric Origins of Modern Sexuality. That might sound like a bunch of science stuff, but let me tell you that this book was so fun and so engaging, yet full of things that had me asking more and more questions about what our sexuality means to us. Like, why do we cheat? And what does all of this Prehistory free love stuff have to do with us today, right here, living in the modern world? I can't wait for you to all here what the co-author Christopher Ryan h

Christopher Ryan

Christopher Ryan received a BA in Literature in 1984 and an MA and Ph.D. in psychology twenty years later. He spent the intervening decades traveling around the world, working at very odd jobs (e.g., gutting salmon in Alaska, teaching English to prostitutes in Bangkok and self-defense to land-reform activists in Mexico, managing commercial real-estate in New York's Diamond District, helping Spanish physicians publish their research, Ebonics to English translation for a Spanish film festival...). Along the way, he decided to pursue doctoral studies in psychology, where his research focused on trying to distinguish the human from the cultural. His doctoral dissertation analyzes the prehistoric
