February 21st 2012: What family caregivers should know about options for pain relief

Bill Archer develops pulsed electromagnetic wave field therapy as an alternative for pain management. He says what he learned about family caregivers' needs from his own family caregiving experience, and what got him interested in the problem of pain. He describes the types of pain and the problems these cause. He explains the problems associated with pain relief. He describes the pain relief offered by the electromagnetic therapy, how it works, and the evidence that it works. He identifies the types of pain for which he does and does not recommend it. He talks about the things family caregiver
