January 03rd 2013: Special Encore Presentation: Dwindling Herring and Clearing the Coastline

Patrick Paquette, a community organizer who represents bass fishing organizations in Massachusetts and Matthew McKenzie, Maritime History Professor at the University of Connecticut, talk with Rob about where have all the herring gone and how Cape Cod has changed over two centuries from a vibrant fishing community to something completely different. Patrick Paquette explains early efforts to save herring by collaborating with diverse interest groups through the CHOIR collaboration "where different voices needed to learn to sing in harmony." He also noted a striped bass food shortage along the
