Asked if he misses the old days of WWII, a senior CIA agent responds, "What I miss is the clarity." ("Three Days of the Condor") In a complex, changing world thinking clearly and correctly is a critical skill. How do we test what we hear for accuracy? How do we make life decisions that are good for us and others when there is too much information? Join us and learn the two types of truth and the two tests for truth that can be applied to any statement or set of assertions. Knowing these will give you a way of dialoging with what others have to say. More importantly, they allow us to evaluate
