January 15th 2013: Creative Ways to Raise Awareness for Autism

This week on Autism Spectrum Radio we discuss the continuing need to promote autism awareness, education and inclusion. Unfortunately the increased rate of autism diagnoses does not naturally equate to more community awareness. In many cases, the peers of our kids with autism can be powerful advocates for creating an informed school experience and more hopeful future of inclusion. This week, host Rob Haupt explores some of the ways autism awareness is being approached with our kids. Rob is excited to welcome two of the young creators of The Six Degree Project a group that is gaining great me

The Six Degree Project

The Six Degree Project was developed by passionate students at Northern Secondary School in Toronto, a grassroots initiative dedicated to creating social change in their Northern community and beyond. The project is spearheaded collaboratively by autistic Northern student and autism advocate Carly Fleischmann, and students Emily Albert and Mia Kibel. The endeavor is affiliated with Autism Speaks Canada. The campaign is a student driven mission committed to improving the lives of children and youth with autism around the world, by generating meaningful awareness and knowledge. It works off the basis that we are all connected to each other through 6° of separation. The goal of the project is
