May 2nd 2013: The Capacity for Brilliant Leadership

How it is that leaders with very different personality traits (e.g., extroversion vs. introversion; tough minded vs. open and flexible) can all demonstrate brilliant leadership? In this week's conversation, Deborah Helsing, Ed.D will describe Adult Development Theory. A developmental perspective assumes that leadership can be learned; that the central demands and qualities necessary for leadership develop can be intentionally nurtured and developed over time. Efforts to accelerate leader development should attend more to the interior layers of identity development and adult development th
