Afflicted By Addiction Archives Available

August 27th 2013: "I'm just a mother" Deborah Bockstahler bares her soul to spare others her fate through "A Mothers Cry".

Rarely will someone so raw with emotion compose themselves enough to share the tragic details of losing a child. Her son Cody overdosed on heroin on 7-1-2012, falling into the addiction trap after an accident and a prescription for Oxy. So many share the commonalities of Deborah's dark journey but she is determined to raise awareness to save others' the agony of burying their child. Her graphic detail about the Hell a family endures is a repetitious disaster all across the US daily. Her story is a gripping view into the unthinkable. You will feel her unique desire to stop this madness.

Deborah Bockstahler

Deborah Bockstahler describes herself as "just a mom." A mom who buried her 28 year old son is now a rising voice in the fight for awareness, education and reform. From a small town near Rockford Illinois she beats on every door to have her voice and others heard so people understand that addiction kills and it is in their backyard. Her living room is now full of posters of hundreds of young adults who have died of an overdose. Deborah feels like these children are family as she organizes events and raises awareness through her Facebook page; Drug Awareness, A Mothers Cry.
