November 06th 2013: Real Stories of Opioid Addiction and Recovery

As the nation moved past the peak of the methamphetamine epidemic, we found ourselves in an opioid (painkiller) epidemic. The nation has not yet turned the corner on rising rates of death from painkillers (opioids) and though we have better counseling, pharmacological and intervention technologies to support recovery, it is not enough to have even slowed the gush of the rates of death. Dr Joe has the pleasure of interviewing two courageous women who are living lives of opioid addiction recovery, with serenity. This is the first of a four-show series on opioid addiction; conveying classic pa

Jen and Erin

Jen and Erin will speak for themselves about what did and did not work for recovery from opioid addiction. One a nurse, the other a hairdresser who escaped life for one year with no drug to use, just to resume the moment it was available. Hear the stories of how drugs threatened and saved their lives.
