Faith and Money: Making the Connection Archives Available

March 31st 2014: The money we don't give away

Many of us, as people of faith, give a portion of our income to help others. But what about the money we don't give away—the money we plan to spend, save for emergencies or invest for retirement? As unbelievable as it may sound, we can use that money on behalf of God's community, as well, and still have it for what we need. Our savings can actively benefit our community and be there when we need it. Our investments can support our faith values and grow for retirement. We can support an economy of enough for all by thoughtfully choosing what we buy. Our guests today will expand our vision for

Featured Guests

Andy R. Loving

Andy R. Loving is a national expert in community investing and has won multiple awards for the many ways he helps people move money into financial institutions that serve poor people domestically and around the world. Professionally a financial advisor, Andy has been a lifelong social activist, working on behalf of poor people and communities and organizing middle- and upper-class U.S. Americans to work for justice through their finances.

Jim Marsh, Jr.

Jim Marsh, Jr., puts his faith, values and money to work through community and socially screened investments. Still a board member of a family-owned furniture company in his home state of NC, Jim is a child and adolescent psychotherapist in the Washington, DC, area and works with inner-city teenage boys in a Rites of Passage program. An ordained United Methodist Minister, Jim has a strong calling to help guide and inspire people to find their true voice and true self.
