August 27th 2014: Married Entrepreneurs Make A Perfect Pair

Business partners often joke that they're married to one another. What happens when you actually are married to your business partner? Husband and wife Jeremy and Lila Stewart launched flip-flop brand Hari Mari in Dallas two years ago. They knew that combining home life and work life can be fraught with landmines. But just as there are horror stories, there are also successful couples who have built household brands together. Through some missteps, the Stewarts learned to navigate the challenges of working as husband-and-wife entrepreneurs and find balance between their personal and profession

Lila and Jeremy Stewart

ari Mari's roots are born out of married couple, Jeremy & Lila Stewart's time spent living in Indonesia, where each worked on projects related to improving kids' lives: Jeremy, making a documentary film on kids suffering from malnutrition; Lila, volunteering with an orphanage. Moving back to the States, they decided the next project they undertook would go to help kids, and when they saw an unmet need for comfortable & colorful flip flops at the premium level, they married the two passions together and partnered with their childhood friend, John Veatch, to found Hari Mari in 2012. Discovering that pediatric cancer is the most fatal disease among American children, it clicked. Hari Mari's com
