September 18th 2014: A PI's Tool: Informational Data Providers

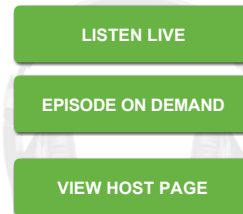

Ferretting out fraud, recovering abducted children, locating witnesses for criminal or civil cases, identifying counterfeit products are just some of the many services provided by private investigators. One of the most significant tools in an investigator's tool box is access to databases of information. Always controversial, these databases that compile information about all of us can come from the government or from the private sector. Scott Wilson is the Director of Sales for IRBsearch and will discuss the ins and outs of access to data and how it relates to the propriety products offered by
