February 05th 2015: The Jig Is Up

In the world of sports the circle of life never ceases to end, it only gives rise to a new beginning full of hope and optimism. The culmination of 2014 college football season raised the stakes as college football playoffs eliminated any doubt about who's number one. Super Bowl XLIX proved that the biggest plays may come from the most unlikely of sources. That's exactly what top collegiate football programs are hoping to capitalize off of after national signing day. On today's show we hear personal accounts from the recruiting trail with 49ers special teams coach and former Houston Cougars saf

Thomas McGaughey

McGaughey played his collegiate football as safety with the Houston Cougars from 1991-95, where he was also named special teams captain his senior season. As an undrafted free agent, McGaughey spent time with the Cincinnati Bengals and Philadelphia Eagles in 1996-97. He would later win a championship ring in NFL Europe World Bowl during the 1997 season. McGaughey carried those winning ways into the NFL as he helped the 2006 Denver Broncos reach 13-3 record and punch a ticket to the AFC Championship. The 2007 New York Giants special teams unit excelled under McGaughey's tutelage en route to Super Bowl victory while featuring several Pro Bowl players. In 2011 and 2012, the LSU Tigers ranked

Jonathan Dwyer

Jonathan Dwyer is a bruising running from Woodstock, Georgia who decided to remain in-state and play his collegiate ball in Atlanta at Georgia Tech. In 2007 Dwyer rushed for 436 yards on 82 attempts and nine touchdowns. He would later be named to the ACC All-Freshman Team. The 2008 season had some memorable moments with several 100 yard games, but none meant more than 60 yard scamper against in-state rival Georgia. Dwyer finished the game with 144 yards on the day against one of the SEC's top defensive units. Dwyer went on the claim ACC player of the year and a unanimous first-team honors. Dwyer would later go on to win other awards in his time at Georgia tech, displaying his dedication an
