April 29th 2015: Special Encore Presentation: Archaeology and JPAC's Mission to Repatriate Military Combat Victims

Have you ever wondered how the criminologists popularized in such TV shows as "CSI" developed their investigative techniques and deductive strategies? Many of their methods and approaches are derived from archaeological science. The emergence of forensic anthropology and archaeology is largely traceable to the efforts of the American military in recovering the remains and establishing the identities of missing soldiers (MIA's) during the Vietnam war in the 1970's. This week's episode introduces the nuts and bolts of forensic archaeology through the mission of the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command
