May 13th 2015:End of Life Wisdom

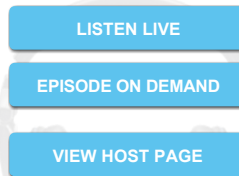

As a hospice social worker and as someone whose husband died of cancer, Marcy Bernstein has learned a lot about the end of life and what kind of support people need to support a "good death." It is her calling to offer advice, support and wisdom to people facing what she has faced and what she has helped many many clients to face. She has created an advice column and website that offer anyone a place to ask questions and get answers. Following her own inner voice and addressing the needs she encounters around her, her life now points more and more in the direction of helping people answer end

Marcy Rosen Bernstein

Marcy Rosen Bernstein, is a social worker who has been working in hospice in New York City since 2006. She started her journey as a hospice volunteer. After her husband died of Multiple Myeloma, she went back to school at the age of 60 to earn an MSW at Fordham University. Marcy is also a graduate of the End-of-Life Practitioners Program of the Metta Institute, Sausalito, CA. As a psycho-social counselor she served thousands of patients and families. Her expertise and compassion helped to normalize and bring resolution to the end of life challenges of her patients and their loved ones. Marcy created endoflifewisdom.org to assist people navigating the challenges presented at end of
