June 15th 2015: What Lions are Whispering with Kevin Richardson

Through an intimate and enlightening conversation with Kevin Richardson, we learn why he is called The Lion Whisperer, but what makes Kevin exceptional is that he listens to what lions are telling us. Through his unique relationships with his lions, Kevin opens a window into the mind behind the mane. Our conversation is a unblemished view into Kevin's own journey of passion for lions, and why he has dedicated his life to saving them and ending the industrialized farming of lions as nothing more than commodity, and exposing the dark underbelly of canned lion hunts. Manipulating nature and an i

Featured Guest

Kevin Richardson

Kevin Richardson studied zoology, marine biology and exercise physiology, but believed working with animals would remain a hobby. When he was twenty-three, he had the opportunity to work with two six-month-old lion cubs, Tau and Napoleon, at the Lion Park near the outskirts of his home in Johannesburg, he still works with the grown cubs. Kevin's work with big cats relies on intuition rather than static rules and. He interacts with, slept next to, fed, and lived with lions for most of his adult life. Rejecting the traditional notion that lions should be mastered and dominated, he develops relationships based on love and respect. These relationships however, are not instant- as he has known
