June 29th 2015: The Danger of Extreme Social Responsibility: Silencing Potential Dialogue

DJ and Da Bear discuss hypersensitivity in today's culture, how it shapes university spaces and how it has shaped the media. Militant policing of language and images in our daily interactions that didn't exist years ago in the multitude that they do now, circulate on social media, creating a silence that is counterproductive to the social progress we have fought so hard for. As the Internet opens our world, there seems to be less and less room for error. The space for conversation to flourish is slowly diminishing because of our heightened sense of social responsibility.
