Thursday at 12 Noon Pacific
July 30th 2015: Even your ipod was a roboadvisor

AI is augmenting our investment decisions in ways that we never imagined. And although it has been shown that computers can provide sounder investment advice than humans, it is not unaffected by the human element. Today Liz Lumley, guest hosting, talks with Paolo Sironi from IBM Analytics about the ways that humans interact with AI and how that will continue to shift and become sustainable disruption. Also, Ian Kar of FinTechtoday.net discusses the latest about Paypal, Square, and of course, Apple. And in the latest installment of of Women in FinTech series Liz interviews Moni

Ian Kar

Blogger- Fintechtoday.net I've been a journalist for a few years and have been cited in a number of publications, including The Information, Barrons, Fortune, Forbes, TIME, Daring Fireball, Business Insider, Techmeme, Fortune, Schneider on Security and organizations like NASDAQ, Morgan Stanley analyst notes, and Stanford Law and Business School. I've reported on a wide variety of topics, like Yodlee's IPO, executive changes at Capital One and Visa, the relationship between tech companies like Apple and banks, technical advances in mobile payments (like tokenization), and more "inside baseball" stuff in the financial technology world.
