December 9th 2015: Notes From the Waiting Room

Being an advocate for a loved one at the end of their lives is so much more than reading their advance directive documents. The decisions are complex, nuanced and unpredictable. There is no way to predict what will be asked of us and no way to insure that we will be clear what decisions to make. Bart Windrum learned this first hand when his own parents came to the end of their lives, both in the hospital, and what the medical community had to offer appeared to make things worse. Only looking back did he realize that their deaths could have been eased if he had known they were in their dying ti

Featured Guest

Bart Windrum

Bart Windrum became a citizen end-of-life reformer after the hospitalized deaths of his parents in 2004 and 2005. His book, Notes from the Waiting Room: Managing a Loved One's End-of-Life Hospitalization, examined what happens throughout terminal hospitalizations and was a 2009 Colorado Book Awards finalist.
