June 16th 2016: How Women Decide: What's True, What's Not and What Strategies Spark the Best Choices

In this episode, Dr. Therese Huston, cognitive scientist, professor and the author of How Women Decide: What's True, What's Not and What Strategies Spark the Best Choices, offers a new and well researched look at women as decision makers. She addresses the reality of gender dynamics in the workplace like the glass ceiling, the glass cliff and the different consequences of making a mistake for men and women in leadership while dispelling the myths and beliefs about gender differences and decision making with comprehensive research. She proposes that the reason that men and women should both be

Dr. Therese Huston

Therese Huston, Ph.D. is looking to change the conversation about women as decision-makers. The New York Times calls her book, How Women Decide: What's True, What's Not and What Strategies Spark the Best Choices (Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, 2016) "required reading on Wall Street." Therese is a cognitive scientist at Seattle University and she's written for the New York Times and Harvard Business Review. Her first book, Teaching What You Don't Know, was published by Harvard University Press and has made the common university practice of teaching outside one's expertise a lot more manageable. Therese received her BA from Carleton College, a PhD in Cognitive Psychology from Carnegie Mellon U
