August 31st 2016: So You Think You Want to Be an Entrepreneur?

It's not for everyone but many people will at some point ask themselves, shouldn't I just be off working for myself? The feeling of self-sufficiency and charting one's own course in life seems to be a draw for many people across the globe. Being an entrepreneur offers the opportunity to build a legacy organization and perhaps impact a great number of people. But is it truly for you? In this episode, we feature a long-time serial entrepreneur who shares his perspective on what he sees as four kinds of entrepreneurs, the basic business types one can entertain, and some key considerations about o

Mark Phillips

Mark Phillips is a life-time serial entrepreneur who has created numerous businesses since age 10. Today he owns WineTasting.org, among several other ventures. After college, he started a company and sold it four years later. Quite unexpectedly, he ventured into the wine business when an evening celebrating this sale included an exceptionally good glass. Soon, he began organizing wine groups and developed his own wine glass. A wine loving executive discovered his approach and invited him to host a television show which aired nationally for six years and became the most-watched wine show ever. Mark is the author of Swallow This, a book illustrating his unique, non-snobby approach to wine. I
